

Noise from the social areas distracted workers

A central atrium carried noise throughout the space

ANMF state of the art facility

The Australian Nurses and Midwifery Union has built a state-of-the-art facility for their members. The soaring atrium and modern open office spaces were designed to encourage collaboration within the office environment and create light filled, modern space for members to congregate.

Due to the high volume of glass and other hard surfaces, and low ambient background noise levels, sound transference was creating distracting noise and reducing speech privacy.

Soundmask's multi-zone system was included to create a comfortable acoustic environment where sounds travelling throughout the space, and in particular via the atrium, would be minimised.
